North Dakota Critical Access Hospitals

History

In the late 1890's the Semple-Gibson Hospital, named after two of the county's early physicians, opened. In 1910, the hospital was forced to close due to hard times. The county went without a hospital until 1928 when Mrs. Flora Borusky, a pioneer serving maternity patients, opened the Borusky Hospital. She later turned her hospital into a home for elderly people.

Cavalier County citizens joined together in 1939 to help the Sisters of Mercy based in Omaha, Nebraska, to build a 28 bed facility which became known as Mercy Hospital. In 1955 the Sisters of Presentation from Fargo, ND began operating the hospital and changed the name to St. Mary's.

People of the area once again united toward a common goal: a county-owned hospital. Cavalier County Memorial Hospital opened in 1971; just four years after the initial planning began. In the following three decades, CCMH has added services from state-of-the-art laboratory equipment, mobile diagnostic services, and visiting specialists, to outpatient clinics in Langdon and Walhalla.

Recreation

Langdon is nestled in the heart of the state's leading wheat, barley and flax producing county of northeastern North Dakota. The school system offers a wide selection of study for both children and adults, with an ongoing diversified educational enrichment program. A beautiful 25-acre park in the heart of the city provides a heated swimming pool, playground equipment, and outdoor volleyball and tennis courts. Golfing enthusiasts can enjoy a nine-hole golf course on the city outskirts. About 15 miles from Langdon is Mount Carmel Dam and recreation area that provides outdoor enthusiasts with swimming, boating, fishing and water sports. North Dakota's finest downhill and cross-country skiing is within 30 miles of Langdon on the beautiful Pembina River Valley.
