2021 Annual Dakota Conference on Rural & Public Health

June 2–4

Virtual Conference

Providing Quality Education for Rural and Public Health Professionals

Dakota
Conference
on Rural and Public Health

Who Should Attend

- Rural healthcare professionals
- Public health professionals
- Mental health professionals
- Researchers
- Social workers
- Administrators—nursing home, hospital and clinic
- Nurses
- Dietitians
- Educators
- Health professions students
- All individuals interested in improving healthcare service in rural areas

Goals

1. Provide continuing education to health and human service administrators, managers, researchers, and clinical providers in the areas of
 - healthcare administration,
 - health promotion and disease prevention,
 - environmental health and occupational health, and
 - diverse populations and health disparities.
2. Create an environment of learning that is informative and educational to an interdisciplinary and multidisciplinary audience of health and human service professionals.
3. Provide conference participants with the opportunity to formally present community-based solutions to common rural and public health issues.
4. Provide conference participants with the opportunity to informally network with others to share skills and strategies meant to address access, financial, and quality-of-care issues found in rural and public health.
5. Foster an environment that is conducive to collaboration between different organizations, health and human service disciplines, and communities.

Objectives

Upon completion of this conference, participants will be able to describe strategies meant to address access, financial, and quality-of-care issues found in rural and public health. Participants will be able to define solutions to improving health and develop skills that will be taken to the participant's communities and implemented in their healthcare practices.
